"READY TO GO" JOBS AND INFRASTRUCTURE PROJECTS

America's Mayors Report to the Nation on Projects to Strengthen Metro Economies and Create Jobs Now

Release #4: January 17, 2009

Infrastructure Jobs in Cities – "Ready to Go"

Today The U.S. Conference of Mayors releases the fourth in its series of reports on infrastructure projects that are "ready to go" in cities across the nation – projects that meet local infrastructure needs and contribute to local economic development goals, that can be funded quickly through existing federal channels and start quickly when funding is received, and that can generate the significant numbers of jobs that are needed to counter the severe economic problems we face today in our metro areas and our nation as a whole.

Today we are reporting that, in 779 cities of all sizes in all regions of the country, a total of 18,750 local infrastructure projects are "ready to go." These projects represent an infrastructure investment of $149,758,339,126 that would be capable of producing an estimated 1,604,371 jobs in 2009 and 2010. These are the cumulative totals of projects, required funding, and jobs to be created that have been reported in the four surveys of cities conducted by the Conference of Mayors over the past three months. The populations of the 779 cities submitting projects total 77,946,664.

The Conference of Mayors MainStreet Economic Recovery plan, developed under the leadership of Miami Mayor Manuel A. (Manny) Diaz, the President of the Conference, calls for federal investments in 10 sectors that will quickly create jobs in metro areas, improve the infrastructure that the private sector needs to succeed, help the small businesses of Main Street America, and produce lasting economic and environmental benefits for the nation. The following chart summarizes, for each of the 10 sectors, the number of infrastructure projects described by the 779 cities, the total investment that would be required to implement these projects, and the estimated number of jobs that they would generate.

SECTOR	PROJECTS	FUNDING	JOBS
Community Development Block Grants	4,028	26,507,901,425	385,256
Energy Block Grants and Green Jobs	1,378	30,604,966,149	151,811

School Modernization	1,066	7,082,502,544	108,336
Public Housing Modernization	634	2,474,602,762	25,160
Public Safety Jobs and Technology	1,505	5,677,375,769	39,391

Cities were invited to submit projects that reflected their unique local infrastructure needs, produced jobs for their residents, and contributed to future economic development. Readers of this report should note that some cities were unable to submit estimates of jobs to be created by all of their individual projects. Because this information could not be included in our tabulations, the total job numbers we are reporting for the cities as a group should be considered conservative.

Mayors recognize that the economic recovery initiative to be undertaken by the new administration and Congress will include a review process through which projects eligible for funding will be identified. The projects listed in this report in no way represent an inventory of projects formally proposed for funding. Rather, they are examples of the kinds of projects that, if funded through existing channels, would contribute to local infrastructure needs and economic development and to the President-elect's stated goals for infrastructure revitalization and job creation.

All projects received from mayors and cities are included by the Conference in its reports. The mayors and cities responding to the Conference surveys have used their own processes to determine which projects will be submitted, and the responsibility for justifying the individual projects that are put forward resides with them.

Documenting the Need for Infrastructure Investment

In early November, cities across the nation provided the Conference of Mayors with examples of needed infrastructure projects that could be started quickly and completed in 2009 if additional federal funding were made available for them in any of the 10 MainStreet infrastructure investment sectors. For these projects, the cities gave us their estimates of the amount of funding that would be needed and the number of jobs that would be created. A report describing more than 4,600 projects in 154 cities capable of creating well over a quarter-million jobs was released by the Conference in Washington on November 13.

A week after the release of this first report, President-elect Obama stated a goal of creating 2.5 million jobs in America by 2011 – a goal strongly supported by the nation's mayors. The President-elect described a two-year initiative to rebuild the nation's crumbling infrastructure. In response, the Conference invited cities to again submit information on infrastructure projects, this time on projects that could start quickly in 2009 and be completed by the end of 2010. The report on this second survey was released in Washington, in a Capitol Hill press conference, on December 8. It listed nearly 11,400 projects in 427 cities that were capable of creating nearly 848,000 jobs – an estimate the Conference considers to be conservative.

Immediately following the press conference, a delegation of mayors led by Conference President Diaz met with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and several Committee Chairs, presented them with copies of the report, and briefed them on the advantages of direct funding of infrastructure projects in cities through existing programs such as the Community Development Block Grant. The mayors' report and proposal for economic recovery were also discussed in a meeting which followed with Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, New York Senator Charles Schumer, and Michigan Senator Debbie Stabenow, and with members of the Obama-Biden intergovernmental transition team.

The following week, in Chicago, the survey report was included in a mayors' meeting with President-elect Obama, his designated Assistant for Intergovernmental Relations and Public Liaison, Valerie Jarrett, and his designated Director of Intergovernmental Affairs, Cecilia Munoz.

Because the Conference continued to receive requests from cities to contribute to the published examples of "ready-to-go" projects, a third invitation to submit project information was sent to mayors on December 10. Many new cities responded, and many of the cities included in the Conference's first and second reports submitted additional projects. The Conference's third report, released December 19, listed well over 15,000 projects in 641 cities capable of producing more than 1.2 million jobs.

Responding again to cities' requests to add projects to the Conference's growing "ready to go" list, a fourth invitation to submit information was sent to mayors on December 29. As this report shows, the projects added by new cities, along with those added by cities included in the earlier reports, again significantly increased our total estimates of federal infrastructure funding that could be invested and jobs that could be created.

A Call to Action – More Urgent Each Day

Over the past year, the scope of the economic crisis affecting Main Street America has been well documented and widely reported. As we enter 2009, economic activity continues to slow and the labor market continues to deteriorate. Consumer spending, business investment, and industrial production continues to decline. Problems affecting financial markets and credit conditions remain unresolved. We know that, as the economy weakens and joblessness increases, the current real estate foreclosure crisis can only worsen.

The nation's unemployment rate reached 7.2 percent in December, 2.3 percentage points higher than a year ago. Since the start of the recession in December 2007, the nation has lost 3.6 million jobs. About 11.1 million American workers are now unemployed, another 1.9 million are "marginally attached" to the labor force (meaning that they have looked unsuccessfully for work at some point in the past year), and recent calculations suggest that one in every eight workers is now underemployed. The ranks of the long-term unemployed (those jobless for 27 weeks or more) doubled in 2008, to 2.6 million; claims for unemployment benefits are at the highest level in a quarter-century; and, in many states across the nation, the extended benefits that have been paid to the long-term unemployed will soon be cut off.

In today's world, metro economies drive the national economy, currently accounting for 86 percent of national employment, 90 percent of labor income, and 90 percent of gross domestic product (GDP). It should be obvious that investing in Main Street metro economies is the most direct path to creating the jobs and stimulating the business that can begin to resolve the current economic crisis.

Washington has used hundreds of billions of federal dollars to bail out Wall Street, banks, insurance companies and others, and hopes that this investment will eventually be returned to the U.S. Treasury and the taxpayer. It is now time for Washington to make another kind of investment, one that guarantees a return: It is time to initiate MainStreet Economic Recovery – immediate and direct assistance that enables local governments and the private sector to invest in the infrastructure and create the jobs that will help restore this nation's economic growth.

Opponents of economic stimulus spending assert that, because infrastructure projects could take years to start and many more years to complete, investing in them would not have the short-term impact on the economy that is needed. We have documented in this report, however, that there are many thousands of infrastructure projects in cities that can get underway immediately and be completed quickly – within one or two years. As we report, projects in just 779 cities are capable of quickly generating over 1.6 million jobs – more than half of the total three million jobs now sought by the President-elect over the next two years.

MainStreet Economic Recovery – Immediate and Direct

On October 29, Louisville Mayor Jerry Abramson, a Past President of the Conference, presented the Conference's initial MainStreet plan to the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee. On the same day, our Immediate Past President, Trenton Mayor Doug Palmer, presented it to the House Ways and Means Committee. The plan they presented was based on the package of programs for a second economic stimulus that passed the House of Representatives in September but was stopped in the Senate. To that House package we added three needed initiatives: Community Development Block Grant for Infrastructure; Green Jobs – Energy/Environment Block Grant; and Public Safety.

In most of the programs, 30 percent or more of the funding would go to the states, with the remainder going to cities and counties – the metro areas that account for the bulk of the nation's gross domestic product. In the transportation sector, our plan demands that current-law commitments to local areas be preserved in distributing funds under the Surface Transportation Program (STP).

It is important to understand that our MainStreet Economic Recovery plan calls for funds to flow quickly and directly to cities through 10 federal funding streams that are already in existence; many of these have demonstrated their effectiveness over many years. The 10 infrastructure investments we are recommending are:

- Community Development Block Grants – CDBG would be used to create jobs through: the construction of public facilities and improvements, water and sewer facilities, streets, and neighborhood centers; the conversion of school buildings for eligible purposes; activities relating to energy conservation and renewable energy resources; and assistance to profit-motivated businesses to carry out economic development and job creation/retention activities.

- Energy Block Grants and Green Jobs – The new Energy Efficiency and Conservation Block Grant (EECBG) program would be used by cities, counties, and states to create thousands of energy efficiency and renewable energy production projects. These projects could include energy retrofits of public and private buildings in local areas, installation of solar panels or wind turbines for the production of electricity on local buildings, deployment of new energy distribution technologies (such as distributed generation or district heating and cooling systems) that significantly increase energy efficiency, and development of systems to capture and generate power from methane at landfills.

- Transit Equipment and Infrastructure – Transit funding would be used to purchase buses, street cars, rail cars, and other rolling stock and equipment needed to create additional capacity; help stabilize fare increases; and improve reliability. It would also be used to restore and maintain facilities and infrastructure in a state of good repair through projects that could, for example, expand station capacity, improve rail tracks, and provide customer information screens.

- City Streets/Metro Roads – Highway funding must be distributed through the Surface Transportation Program (STP); this ensures that it will provide maximum flexibility to cities, counties, and states to undertake bridge, bus and rail, and road projects in metropolitan areas.

- Airport Technology and Infrastructure – Projects funded through the Airport Improvement Program (AIP) would include runway and taxi rehabilitations, extensions, and widening; obstruction removal; apron construction, expansion and rehabilitation; rescue and firefighting equipment and facilities; airside service or public access roads; and noise mitigation and abatement (Part 150) associated with aircraft operations, including voluntary home buyout, which would fuel the local housing market, and residential and business insulation programs.

- Amtrak – Amtrak would use infrastructure funding to make necessary upgrades to tracks, bridges and tunnels, electric traction, interlockings, signals and communications, and stations on the Amtrak system. In addition, Amtrak could refurbish rail cars that are currently in storage and return them to service.

- Water and Wastewater Infrastructure – Local governments contribute 98 percent of the total investment in wastewater and 95 percent of the investment in water infrastructure. Water and wastewater infrastructure grants would be used to assist with rehabilitating aging water and sewer infrastructure, complying with sewer overflow issues, and promoting source water protection and availability.

- School Modernization – Federal school modernization funds would be used to repair and modernize school buildings in both large- and small-city school districts, improve their energy efficiency, and equip them with first-class technology.

- Public Housing Modernization – Public Housing Capital Funds would be used for repair and construction projects, including safety repairs.

- Public Safety Jobs and Technology – Providing COPS hiring grants to local police departments would allow them to put additional police officers on the streets and in the schools as school resource officers. Additional Byrne Justice Assistance Grant funding could be used to hire personnel, support those personnel, and purchase equipment and new technologies which make law enforcement personnel more effective in their jobs.

"Ready to Go" Infrastructure Projects

For each of our 10 MainStreet infrastructure investment sectors, the following pages list infrastructure projects that are ready to start quickly in 2009 and be completed by the end of 2010 if federal funding is provided. The projects are listed by state and, within state, by city.
